

Planning and Envisioning a Final Product Weekly Report 2/4/19 to 2/10/19

To start off the week, the goal was to stay as organized as possible and continue to communicate through email, with various elementary principals across Frisco ISD. Additionally, it was necessary to reflect on goals set from January and set new ones for February. With the drive quickly approaching, writing a Final Product proposal along with creating a calendar was also essential, in order to keep everything on track for the remainder of the semester.

While looking over the goals set in January, most were successfully attained or in the process. With that, new goals had to be set for this month, including purchasing, collecting, and dropping off the collection boxes at their designated school. Another goal set was to schedule an observance day and ensure that everything is well put together by the end of the month, right before the drive begins in March.

Another aspect of this week was to email principals and adults throughout the week, updating any drive flyers, and communicating about scheduling a time to pick up the McKinney Noon Lions Club boxes. This week one more elementary school emailed that they would like to participate in the drive. This means there are officially ten schools on board for the drive, which hits my goal right on target. Ten schools will be a great starting place for this project.

Lastly, throughout the week, a Final Product Proposal and Final Product calendar were established. The calendar truly gave perspective as to how much time is left the rest of this semester, and how the time remaining in ISM is flying by. By completing these two assignments, I am able to send both to my mentor and get any suggestions or input regarding my Final Product.

Next week, Original Work Presentations will be conducted and all ISM students will be able to talk about how their Original Work went. This will be a great opportunity to talk about my mentor, how much I've learned, and Research Showcase. With this large presentation, the goal will be to cut down filler words and prepare well in advance. Additionally next week, other goals will include having an observance day with my mentor, collecting the McKinney Noon Lions Club boxes, and preparing the collection boxes for the elementary schools who want the kids to have a friendly competition between grade levels. With next week being an extremely short week, considering all FUSD students have Friday off and I will be missing Thursday, due to a Reedy Tennis tournament, it will be essential to keep up with all school work and ISM goals by cutting down on procrastination and using my time as efficiently as possible.
