

Looking at the Ending

Weekly Report 5/6/19 to 5/12/19

The first thing that happened this week was receiving my Final Presentation Night brochures. When I originally got them, it was nice to see everything in one spot, neatly together. The brochure is important because it presents all the general aspects of ISM and what was covered and accomplished this year. Having the brochures made me prideful of the work I have put into this year and how everything has turned out the way I hoped, and more!

Additionally, a large event that went into this week was turning in the Final Product. After turning in the product, a setup and summary assessment was written, to reflect on the experiences from this year and how the Final Product was both a learning experience and a success. Now that it is officially complete, it is nice to know that ISM is winding down, and the last task to accomplish is Final Presentation Night. It was a relief turning everything in because it was nice to know that all the research, work, and dedication from August to now is finally done. With Final Presentation Night next week, that is the last large event that all of the ISM students will have a week left to focus on.

Lastly, this week I presented a mock presentation to a middle school class. One successful aspect of my speech was that my audience was entertained and was willing to ask questions at the end. One section that I may want to improve on is opening with a better introduction and ending with a stronger conclusion. Also, some parts of my slideshow could use some tidying up. However, overall the presentation was a huge success and the teachers and students were impressed.

Going into next week, it is crucial to ensure that all the little details leading up to Final Presentation Night are double checked and everything is perfect for this evening. After all, this is the night all my work has been leading up to.
